

Hello, fellow Teachers!

You're watching a partial version of my "Critical Trait-Thinking Workshop" slides that I present to schools and districts during the summer months when I am not maintaining my own classroom of students. In 2010, I revised this presentation to align with the rigor and requirements of the Common Core State Standards for Language Arts.

Online at my own website, you can find out how to hire me to come present this 2- or 3-day workshop during June, July or August, or—if you can't convince your state to hire me—then you can purchase my workshop's self-paced PowerPoint slides and the 61-page packet of resources and materials I share when I present live.

Thanks for looking!

--Corbett Harrison (<http://corbettharrison.com>)

© 2011. All rights reserved.

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- _____ My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- _____ My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- _____ My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- _____ My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- _____ My attitude about my topic is obvious.

Here's my favorite trait tool! In addition to my Mentor Text Response Post-its, I created versions that have my students analyze and evaluate their own use of specific trait skills in draft writing.

Again the verb here on the Post-it is rank.

When students have ranked their own skills, they can be asked to look closely at the lower-scoring skills and, from that examination, determine a personalized revision plan for their drafts.

A personal observation: Revision is the least-taught step of the writing process. I think many teachers want there to be a easy-to-teach formula for revision that will work with all students' drafts, but there absolutely isn't. Every student draft turns out differently, showing different strengths and weaknesses. A formula just isn't possible. By giving students choices for creating their own revision plan, we begin to personalize revision.

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- _____ My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- _____ My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- _____ My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- _____ My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- _____ My attitude about my topic is obvious.

On the next slide you will find a portion of the rough draft of an expository essay I wrote to this prompt, which I was having my students write to as well:

Think about a game you enjoy. You have a reader who has never played the game but wants to learn. In a report to your reader, describe the game and explain how it is played. Be sure to explain the rules, the equipment, the number of players, and anything else your reader might need to know to play the game.

My entire rough draft can be found on page 44 of the packet. On the next slide, you can see how I self-ranked my own voice skills, which was the trait I was focusing on with this lesson. I revised my model based on the skills I ranked the lowest.

Modeling the use of this Post-it to create a personalized revision plan is essential!

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- 3 My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- 5 My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- 4 My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- 2 My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- 1 My attitude about my topic is obvious.

Here is how I self-ranked my voice skills.

There are actually two ways to play the game “Heads Up, Seven Up.” Both are fun. Which way did you learn to play?

In one version of the game, seven students are chosen to come to the front of the class. All the students at their desks put their heads down and put their thumbs up on their desks. The seven students move around the classroom and each tap one student's thumb. When tapped, you have to put your thumb down. When all seven students come back to the front, everyone puts their heads up. Tapped students stand up at their desks and try to guess which of the seven students up front touched their thumb. If you guess correctly, you take the place at the front of the person who tapped you for the next round of the game.

(Complete rough draft on page 44)

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

My revised introductory paragraph:

Here's a simple truth about "Heads Up, Seven Up." It's easy to cheat. In fact, everyone has probably cheated at this game at least once. If you never have, see if you can figure out how you might cheat if you were playing either variation of game that I'm going to explain to you.

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- 3 My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- 5 My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- 4 My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- 2 My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- 1 My attitude about my topic is obvious.

Focusing on my 3, 2, and 1 score, I revised the essay to make those skills stand out more.

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

Expository

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- _____ My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- _____ My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- _____ My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- _____ My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- _____ My attitude about my topic is obvious.

Leonardo da Vinci and Me

by David, third grader

Do you ever wonder if you have something in common with someone famous? You could, and I do. I have some things alike and different with Leonardo da Vinci.

Leonardo had a huge feast when his nephew got married. I had a huge feast too, when my sister got married. Leonardo did not believe in war. I don't believe in war, too, like him. Leonardo da Vinci was a hard working artist. Although I am not an artist, I would like to be a hard-working man.

Leonardo was a scientist. Although I am not a scientist, I would like to invent stuff. Leonardo was from Vinci, Italy. I am not from Italy, but I am from America.

You can see Leonardo and I have some things alike and different. I hope this can teach other readers about Leonardo da Vinci.

You Be David!

Rank the voice skills and come up with a revision plan!

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

Narrative

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- _____ My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- _____ My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- _____ My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- _____ My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- _____ My attitude about my topic is obvious.

The Monster

by Brandon (B.C.), third grade writer

I'm out on Pyramid Lake, rocking in my small fishing boat with the wind in my face. I'm waiting patiently for a bite. Next thing I know I have a bite. My pole bent down like crazy.

Everyone said, "Yeah, B.C., yeah!"

So, I picked up my pole and I'm fighting this fish and it's fighting me back. I reel the monster fish in. It's hard because it is heavy. I found out later it weighed 50 pounds.

Everyone on the boat said, "Oh yeah, B.C."

We ate the fish for dinner that night. Everyone said, "This is tasty and this is juicy. Oh yeah!" Ten people ate off the fish, and they scraped their plates clean. There were still leftovers.

You Be Brandon!

Rank the voice skills and come up with a revision plan!

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

Persuasive

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- _____ My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- _____ My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- _____ My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- _____ My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- _____ My attitude about my topic is obvious.

You Be Dakota!

Rank the voice skills and come up with a revision plan!

Dakota's House
Highway 44
January 14, 2009

Dear Freckles the Cat,

I would really love it if you would pretty please let me chase you. I can't chase you when your owner yells at me. I would appreciate it if you wouldn't hide from me. I promise I won't hurt you, if you let me chase you once in a while. I would also appreciate it if you wouldn't run up trees. The wood hurts my paws!

If you don't let me chase you, I'm stuck with my owner watching dumb shows and listening to my owner screech; they call it singing, but that's not what I hear!. It's terrible. If you would just let me chase you four days every week, I would be happy. One other thing, around our owners, we don't get along! – Secret Friendship. Thank You!

Sincerely,
Shimms the Dog (and 3rd grader Dakota)

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other,
from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- 3 My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- 5 My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- 4 My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- 2 My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- 1 My attitude about my topic is obvious.

From experience, I can tell you this.

- It absolutely takes many attempts, mini-lessons, and strong modeling to help students really use these Post-its well. Don't give up on them because students struggle with them during the first few tries; the struggle happens because students are not used to thinking about their own writing at the analysis and evaluate level of Bloom's.
- Investing time early-on to teach students to use the Post-its well was the best investment I ever made in my classroom. The years I used the Post-its to teach pre-writing and revision were the years I helped create the smartest group of thinkers I ever had.

The next-to-final word on these Post-it Notes!

This Workshop's Essential Question: How does a teacher help students to think about writing skills at the analysis and evaluation level of Bloom's taxonomy during both reading and writing instruction?

This workshop: Inspires teachers to use trait-inspired tools that help all students analyze and evaluate their own writing, as well as the writing of their peers.

Voice Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- 3 My writing style reveals a lot about my personality.
- 5 My word choice skills sound natural, not forced.
- 4 My writing comes across as honest and convincing.
- 2 My writing attempts to connect with my audience.
- 1 My attitude about my topic is obvious.

Use the Post-its to Differentiate!

- Determine one focus trait for all students to think about during pre-writing and revision.
- Have at the ready a second trait Post-it for your students who can handle (and would benefit) from thinking about a second trait.
- A second ranking might give your medium- and advanced learners additional choices for revision and additional opportunities to work with trait-specific language.

Sentence Fluency Post-It

Rank these five skills against each other, from 5 (highest) 1 (lowest):

- 5 My sentences mostly begin with different words.
- 3 I use both simple and complex sentences.
- 1 I use a variety of transitional words and phrases.
- 2 Sentence structures that might surprise the reader add voice.
- 4 I add rhythm to my sentences with prepositional phrases and similar writer's tools.

The final word on these Post-it Notes!

Thanks for watching, fellow Teachers!

This was a partial version of my “Critical Trait-Thinking Workshop” slides that I present to schools and districts during the summer months when I am not maintaining my own classroom of students. In 2010, I revised this presentation to align with the rigor and requirements of the Common Core State Standards for Language Arts.

Online at my own website, you can find out how to hire me to come present this 2- or 3-day workshop during June, July or August, or—if you can't convince your state to hire me—then you can purchase my workshop's self-paced PowerPoint slides and the 61-page packet of resources and materials I share when I present live.

Thanks for looking!

--Corbett Harrison (<http://corbettharrison.com>)

© 2011. All rights reserved.